

SCHOOL READINESS

"Walking the fine line between doing too much for your child so that they don't develop their own strength, or too little so that they flounder unnecessarily, requires an understanding of both the theory of child-rearing and an intimate knowledge of your own child. I started out with no children and many theories, and now have many children and few theories. I do have, however, a wealth of experience and amusing anecdotes to help you stay sane and tuned to your own good sense." - Helen Hughes

All fathers and mothers of children zero to six years old are warmly welcome to attend this FREE Parent Education event where we will explore the joys and struggles that parents face in thinking about their young one attending school.

"My name is Helen Hughes. I am 67 years old and have been teaching for 45 years. I have three grown children, 6 step-children and many foster children. I founded Windsor House, a school for the severely unique, 35 years ago when my daughter was unable to cope with the regular school. She now teaches at Windsor House, and one of my grandchildren attends. I love to dance and be silly in plays at school. My partner, thank goodness, is a computer whiz."
